Formerly known as Newtown, Fitzroy was the first suburb in Melbourne - an industrial inner-city enclave frequented by a haunt of criminals, delinquents and ladies of the night. Drinking homebrew under the light of the moon, these unruly residents would wander the famed streets and alleyways of Fitzroy, looking for a good time.

From its derelict beginnings, in the 1990's Fitzroy emerged as a bohemian precinct frequented by Melbourne's most celebrated artists, musicians and the avant-garde, who brought with them a culture of revelry that to this day, is hard to be reckoned with.

Cue Lucy.

A creature of the night, Lucy is the very essence of her etymology- the bringer of light. Housed inside an iconic Fitzroy warehouse, Lucy's high ceilings, saw tooth roof and floor-to-ceiling windows are reminiscent of old industrial Newtown, with all the charm and class of modern Fitzroy.

Made for summer soiree sessions, the dynamic event space is bright and versatile - a blank canvas for occasions grand and small. In addition to an on-site bar and a gastronomic offering as creative as the site in which it stands, Lucy is home to a private dining room with a separate entrance, for intimate gatherings.
